Britannia Reserve Black Cockatoo Pocket Forest No 2

1st November 2026

WA Government Let's Grow funding has been approved for the local community to create a Black Cockatoo pocket forest in an area of disused carpark adjacent to the Tools n Things Library at Britannia Reserve in Leederville. The bitumen area will firstly be de-paved and the sand enriched with co-composted biochar before being planted with a cover crop. It will then be revegetated with native trees and shrubs to provide much needed habitat and food for endangered Black Cockatoos and other animals while providing a shady, cool and enjoyable place for local residents.

The project will be coordinated by community group Transition Town Vincent (TTV) as part of our Black Cockatoo Forest project which has the vision of communities restoring the Black Cockatoo forest to Boorloo Perth, pocket forest by pocket forest. We will use the Miyawaki forest method adapted to WA conditions by Dr Grey Coupland and the Miyawaki Forest Outreach Program at Murdoch University. This method has been successfully demonstrated at our first Black Cockatoo pocket forest created in August 2025 and located 80 metres to the west.

A community co-design process will underpin design of the space as will circularity and resource reuse principles. The intended community planting date is 27 June 2027.

There are a lot of opportunities for you as a community member to be involved in the project. To find out more or to get involved visit the webpage , email info@ttv.org.au or text Ian on 0401 521 895.
